Learning with Foodpanda

In this pandemic hit world, Foodpanda eased the process of food ordering and grocery shopping for people social distancing at home, and supported the survival of local food businesses all over Asia and Europe. This food and grocery delivery app has played a pivotal role in the digital revolution that the 'locked-down world' witnessed, here's our Foodpanda journey.

Foodpanda's Focus

The app's focus on providing seamless experience to its customers and constantly evolving with the changing times is what makes it stand out. For Moolya, it is a learning experience to work so closely with one of Asia's largest food delivery companies, especially as it advances to Europe.

How did we do it?

Moolya's journey with Foodpanda started on 21st of May, 2021. Initially, only one of our Associate Test Managers worked on the project, but very quickly it became a team of 6 with senior testers joining the ranks.

Foodpanda's emphasis on regional expansion and adding new features has been a constant source of motivation for the testers involved in the project. According to Moolya's Lead ET, "Foodpanda being such a quality driven app needed to include fields like QA and bug flow into the JIRA and hence we suggested the same and got it done."

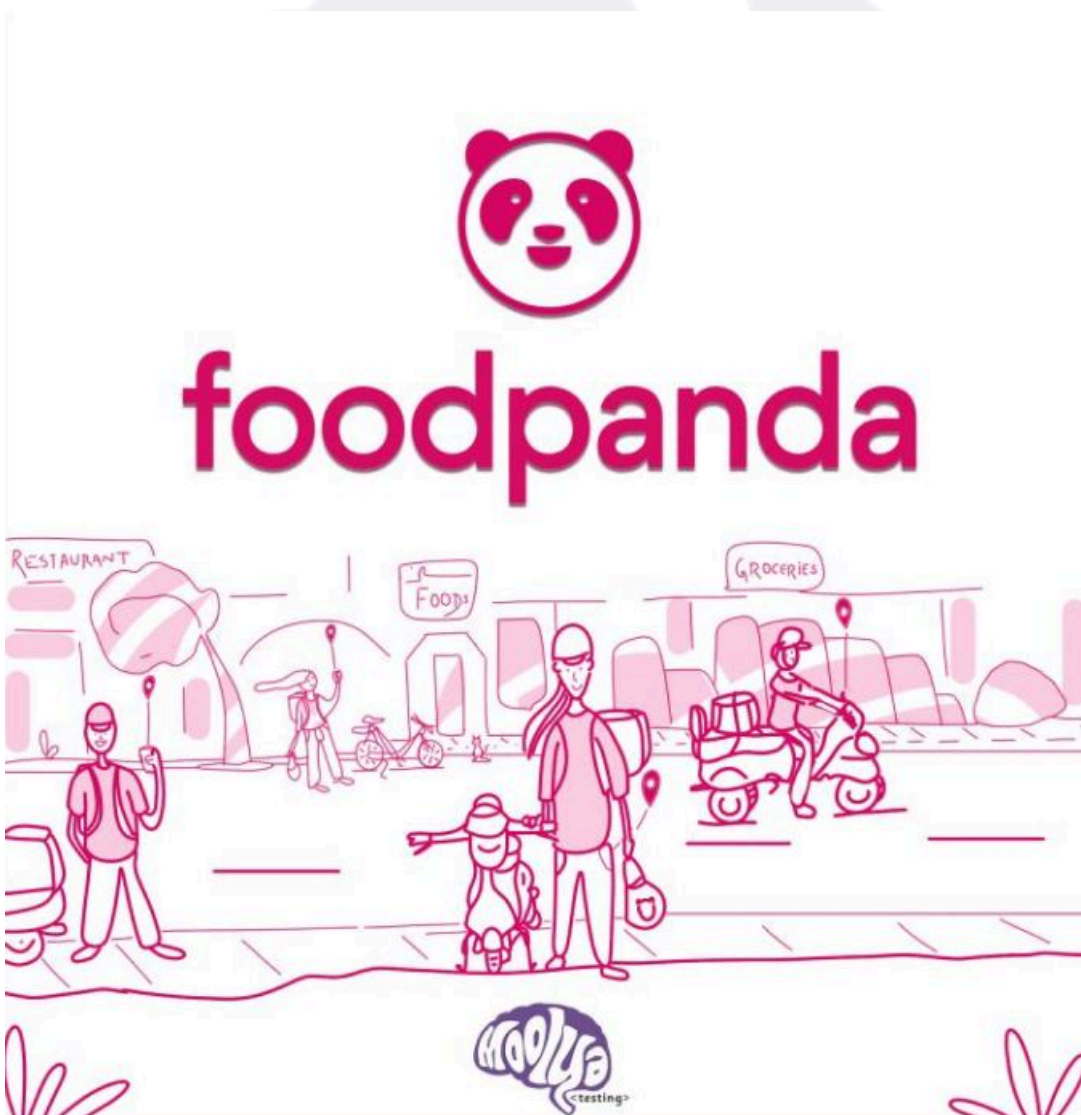

Visibility and test coverage have been — and continue to be — the most critical aspects of this engagement. As the technology stack grew more complex and the team expanded, it became increasingly difficult to track what was covered and to make informed decisions. For an organisation as large and dynamic as Foodpanda, Moolya's focus on test coverage brings immense value. We solve this challenge for every stakeholder by providing dashboards and metrics that clearly trace regressions and highlight areas of impact, enabling faster, more confident decisions.

One of our test managers, also adds, "Ensuring a proper communication between Foodpanda and Moolya was critical for the success of the project. However, despite having to cross language and cultural boundaries we have developed a very strong bond in just a few months"

Why does it matter?

Moolya's partnership with an organization with such international exposure and an appetite for constant expansion has taught Moolyans on each step. Foodpanda continues to play a very critical role in the modern consumer market ,and Moolya is proud to be a part of the story.
